Engagement informed by lived experiences

Date: 2016 (For resources, this is the publication date. For programs, this is the date posted.)

In this three-minute video, Leah Harris, Director of Communications & Development at the National Empowerment Center, shares her thoughts about the importance of involving people with lived experiences in leadership roles to improve screening, assessment, and patient engagement.

In this three-minute video, Leah Harris, Director of Communications & Development at the National Empowerment Center, shares her thoughts about the importance of involving people with lived experiences in leadership roles to improve screening, assessment, and patient engagement.

See This Resource

Engagement informed by lived experiences [1]

See This Resource

Engagement informed by lived experiences [1]

In this three-minute video, Leah Harris, Director of Communications & Development at the National Empowerment Center, shares her thoughts about the importance of involving people with lived experiences in leadership roles to improve screening, assessment, and patient engagement.

In this three-minute video, Leah Harris, Director of Communications & Development at the National Empowerment Center, shares her thoughts about the importance of involving people with lived experiences in leadership roles to improve screening, assessment, and patient engagement.

Links within this resource

Printed on 05/28/2020 from http://www.sprc.org/resources-programs/leadership-informed-lived-experiences