The University of Pittsburgh Services for Teens at Risk Center (STAR-Center [1]) is hosting its 30th anniversary research symposium [2], designed to provide mental health and primary care practitioners with the most current information in the field of youth suicide. The symposium will focus on the causes of youth suicide, the best ways to assess risk, and a review of the latest evidence-based treatment and prevention approaches. It will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., on May 3 and 4, 2017. To register, click here [3].
