From 2003 to 2005, the Suicide Prevention Resource Center (SPRC) collaborated with the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention (AFSP) to create a registry of evidence-based suicide prevention practices. Based on expert review of evaluated practices, 12 programs were identified as evidence-based and classified as either effective or promising.

The EBPP stopped conducting reviews in 2005, when SAMHSA’s National Registry of Evidence-Based Programs and Practices (NREPP) began reviewing and listing suicide prevention interventions. However, all of the programs identified during the EBPP continue to be listed in Section I of the SPRC/AFSP Best Practices Registry. Note that most programs previously identified by the EBPP are now also listed in NREPP.

For a current listing of evidence-based suicide prevention programs, please consult the Best Practices Registry at www.sprc.org. This listing of EBPP-listed programs is provided for archival purposes.

Programs Identified by the EBPP
The following twelve programs were reviewed and classified as evidence-based (either Effective or Promising) by SPRC/AFSP. Effective programs, designated below with an asterisk "*", met a higher standard of effectiveness than Promising programs. For detailed information on the EBPP review process and criteria, see the EBPP Project Description, which is posted on Section I of the BPR (www.sprc.org).
