MASSACHUSETTS: Students Often Struggle After a Mental Health Crisis. Can This Support System Help?

March 13, 2020
News Type: Weekly Spark, Weekly Spark News
State: Massachusetts

PBS News Hour [1]

A successful program for helping students re-enter school after absences for mental health care has been implemented in 137 Massachusetts schools and is now being rolled out in other states. Bridge for Resilient Youth in Transition (BRYT [2]) was started by the Brookline Center for Community Mental Health, which helps school districts plan and implement the program staffed by school personnel. Many of the students supported by the program come from psychiatric hospitalization, while others have just missed a lot of school due to a mental health condition. The program provides a short-term reintegration plan that includes emotional and academic support and coordination of mental health care and academics. Students spend some time each day in a BRYT classroom where they can talk with counselors, get help with homework, or just rest and relax. In addition to helping students re-integrate, BRYT has a record of significantly increasing attendance and graduation rates.

Spark Extra! Learn more about suicide prevention in schools [3].

Links within this resource
[1] https://www.pbs.org/newshour/education/students-often-struggle-after-a-mental-health-crisis-can-this-support-system-help

Printed on 03/14/2020 from https://www.sprc.org/news/massachusetts-students-often-struggle-after-mental-health-crisis-can-support-system-help